The Culture of Quality (Part Three of Three)

Debate continues: Committee on Rank resigns

BY NICK WILLIAMS
News Editor

Members of the Faculty Advisory Committee on Rank resigned because of a disagreement with the Northwest administration.

The committee presented a letter on Wednesday, March 30, to Northwest

President Dr. Dean Hubbard and Vice President for Academic Affairs Dr. Richard Dumont. The letter stated that they "no longer have confidence in the integrity of the ranking process." They also handed in their resignations to their respective Deans.

The committee is made up of full professors who are elected by the faculty. The members of the committee were Dr. Virgil Albertini, Dr. Robert Bohlen, Dr. John Byrd, Dr. Richard Fulton, Dr. Harlan Higginbotham, Dr. Gary McDonald, Dr. Dennis Padgett and Dr. Stanley Wade.

Albertini, a Northwest professor of English and a member of the committee, explained what the committee does.

"We study the folders of the people who want to be promoted," Albertini said. "We learn everything we can about them: their qualifications, what they've done at Northwest and whether we deem them worthy to be promoted to the rank they desire."

After studying the folders, the committee met with Dumont. They then suggested to him which faculty members they thought should be promoted.

Members of the committee felt their recommendations were ignored. Albertini said only two people were promoted this year. No one was promoted to full professor. He also added that no one was promoted to full professor last year.

"Finally we just decided, do they really need us as a committee?" Albertini said. "So we resigned."

'Drop In' promotes community support

BY ROBYN BRINKS

Drop In Day is being held this afternoon on campus.

Northwest and the Maryville Chamber of Commerce are sponsoring the event which will give area residents a chance to witness what a typical day at Northwest is like.

After a noon luncheon held in the Union Ballroom, an open house session will be made available to the public and will continue until 6 p.m. Various academic departments are providing demonstrations. Some departments are also inviting residents into classrooms.

Among the many demonstrations available to visitors is the Electronic Campus. The library will provide hands-on experience to any interested persons. The library will also give tours of the facility.

The Everett W. Brown Education Hall, the Horace Mann Laboratory School, the fitness center located in Lamkin Gym and the administrative offices are open to the public. Each residence hall has also opened at least one room to visitors.

The Missouri Arts Visual Biennial and other exhibits sponsored by the art department are open to the public campus-wide.

Professionals share opinions on management day

Omicron Delta Epsilon, an economics honor society, and the American Society for Personnel Administration sponsored Labor Versus Management Day, Monday.

The sessions, which were held in Colden Hall, featured an arbitrator, mediator, manager and a national union representative. Charles Clark, former regional director of the Equal Opportunities Commission, served as an arbitrator. The federal mediator for the sessions was Carl Wallmark while John Clemons represented management. Clemons is employed as the director of human resources at St. Joseph's Power and Light. Union Representative Tim Fitzpatrick from United Garment Workers of America was also a guest speaker.

Each keynote speaker lectured on his position and job responsibilities, as well as his place in the bargaining process. Those attending the sessions participated in discussions on credit issues and comparable worth.

"I think the sessions changed students' ideas of what unions are all about," ASPA president Lynda Ahlschwede said. "They were able to see professionals actually negotiate a contract."

The spokesmen also covered more specific topics such as the role of a union in a child care center. They pointed out problems with liability that arise in the courts. Even though numerous cases involving suits against child care centers have been taken to court, no precedent has been established.

Although an event such as Labor Management Day has been sponsored in the past, Ahlschwede said ASPA initiated the idea of renewing it. She ad-

Students' common musical interest calls for Celebration

BY CARA MOORE
Staff Writer

"Celebration" seems to be an appropriate name for Northwest's show choir, especially at this time of year as they prepare for spring tours. Not only do the members celebrate their skills, but they also celebrate their pride in the University.

Dr. Richard Weymuth, who has directed Celebration for eight years, views tours as a way to introduce Northwest to high school students. On April 14 and 15, the group will perform at high schools in Creighton, Pleasant Hill, Marshfield and Aurora.

Celebration will also present a benefit concert for Logan-Rogers High School whose choir will be touring in Great Britain this year. In addition to a concert at Springfield's Glendale High school, the group will sponsor a clinic for 12 area high schools. Celebration members will divide into dance teams and teach a choreographed routine to each choir. After rehearsing for an hour, all the schools will perform the routine together in a final concert.

"Tours are a valuable recruiting tool, not only for the music department, but also for the University," Weymuth said.

According to Weymuth, 22 of the present 24 Celebration members were recruited by the University through efforts such as high school tours. A total of 48 high schools will be visited this year by various groups within the music department.

River Club builds artificial nests

BY JENNIFER JOHNSTON
Staff Writer

Members of the 102 River Club constructed and set up 18 wood duck nests around Nodaway County on March 26 and 27.

Plastic buckets were placed in trees about 15 feet off the ground in surrounding wildlife areas. The buckets will serve as nests to female wood ducks.

A three-and-a-half inch hole was cut into each bucket to provide an entrance for the ducks. Wood chips were placed in the bottom of each bucket for nesting purposes. A mesh ladder was added to each nest for the ducklings to crawl out when they hatch.

"I'd rather not specify where the nests are located because I wouldn't want anyone to bother them during their nesting season," Allen Warner, president of the 102 River Club, said. "But they are located near the Platte River, 102 River and around nearby lakes and ponds."

It is now nesting season for the wood duck, and their usual nesting habitat is in hollow trees. Because of the destruction of the natural nesting habitat there are very few places for the wood duck to build its nest. For this reason the 102 River Club decided to place the artificial nests around the county.

The club plans to monitor the boxes every nesting season. They will collect data on the number of nesting ducks, the number of eggs laid and the number of ducklings.

The group hopes to collect enough data to write reports and papers, which they will later publish.

Members who participated in the wood duck project include Alan Warner, Craig VanOtterloo, Art Hampe, Heather Amstutz, Mike Lee and Dave Manson.

Tours of the radio and television stations at Northwest are being given, as well as demonstrations by Tower yearbook and Northwest Missourian newspaper editors.

Members of the Department of Military Science will also get actively involved in demonstrations. Members will rappel off Colden Hall.

A jazz concert featuring Maynard Ferguson will be held in the Mary Linn Performing Arts Center at 8 p.m. tonight to wrap up the day's events.

Northwest's Jazz Ensemble, under the direction of Gordon Vernick, assistant professor of music, will perform prior to the show. The Ensemble's 30-minute concert will begin at 7:15 p.m.

In addition to Celebration's annual spring tour, the group performed earlier this year at the Missouri Music Educators Association at Tan-Tar-A as well as the Missouri State Teachers Association convention in St. Louis. The group also entertained at Northwest events including Sneak Preview and the Musical Gala Benefit. A final production this year will be a spring concert on April 28 at the Mary Linn Performing Arts Center.

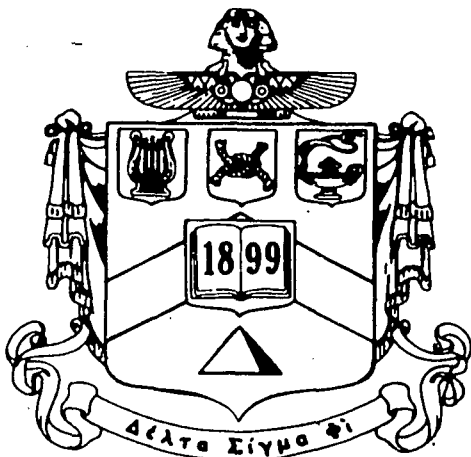

Preparing for these performances requires numerous hours of rehearsing, but Weymuth feels the members interact well.

"Celebration is truly a musical family because they do an enormous amount of things together as a unit," Weymuth said.

Albertini said he has been elected to serve on the committee several times since 1976, after he was promoted to full professor.

"I don't recall before these two years, where no one was promoted to full professor," Albertini said.

The Committee served the University for 158 years.

Problems between the faculty and administration at Northwest have continued to grow since the committee broke up. Last Friday the faculty collected the names of 60 of its members to call for a meeting in which they would discuss and vote whether or not the faculty has confidence in both Hubbard and Dumont.

According to Albertini the names were collected in an hour and a half. The list contains the names of about 25 percent of the faculty.

When the meeting is called, the majority of the faculty must be present. If the majority vote that they do not have confidence, then the Board of Regents must take on the issue. A "no" vote would present a strong, negative message to the Regents concerning the faculty's feelings towards Hubbard and Dumont.

Disagreements between the faculty and administration seem to have persisted since the Culture of Quality document was introduced. Many faculty members said the administration put the Culture of Quality together with "very limited consultation of faculty."

Concern over the extended calendar led some faculty members to ask whether or not they would be paid for the extra work. Various students said they believe that the quality of teaching will decrease if instructors do not receive a pay increase for teaching during the extended time. Hubbard said the amount of pay should not affect how well a person performs his job.

"I think if you take the job, you ought to do your best," Hubbard said. "Arguments over what you're paid for should be independent of that."

Hubbard said he is not willing to gauge the amount of effort he puts into his job based upon what people are willing to pay him for it.

"The taxpayers of this state and the nation believed all along that they were paying for nine months of effort, and they were at one time," Hubbard said about the amount of money instructors are being paid. "As these calendars were shortened, nobody ever gave up any pay."

Hubbard also said students have complained that the quality of some instructors' work drops when they receive tenure. Some instructors, for example, decide they don't need to be in their offices during office hours. According to Hubbard, tenure contributes to such problems.

"Tenure, in my judgment, should be abolished," Hubbard said. "I don't think any of us ought to have a lifetime job guaranteed to us."

Dr. John Hopper, president of the American Association of University Professors at Northwest and a professor of philosophy, said that if this is true, then why did Hubbard attempt to give tenure to Dumont?

Hopper said that, for some unknown reason, Hubbard ordered a request to tenure Dumont at last month's Board of Regents meeting. Hopper publicized Hubbard's request. The Faculty Senate, Student Senate and the AAUP condemned the act. As a result, Dumont withdrew the request.

The organizations argued that the proper channels were not followed regarding Dumont's request for tenure. In a letter to the faculty, President of the Regents Leigh Wilson said that "faculty promoted from within to administrative positions have been allowed to retain their tenure." Wilson also said that "while procedures exist for faculty who wish to be considered for tenure, no such procedures exist for administrators who may be equally qualified."

According to Hopper, some months ago all the Deans were given lifetime tenure by specific request of Hubbard, without going through any kind of procedure. Dr. Robert Sunkel, dean of fine arts and humanities, however, has taught for 25 years.

"Historically, we have never tenured administrators unless they previously got their tenure by being teachers here,"

Hopper said.

The Regents postponed any decision to grant tenure to Dumont, who asked that his request be tabled until "appropriate guidelines are developed."

Instructors who wish to receive tenure must fulfill seven years of work at the University and go through a series of evaluations completed by students, faculty, the vice president and the president. They are granted tenure when their confidence and durability are proven.

Hopper said tenure is not a lifetime award. It protects instructors from "arbitrary firing."

"There are several circumstances under which you can cancel tenure," Hopper said. "It's just that you have to prove they're bad, which is more work than most administrators are willing to do."

Despite whether or not the amount of money an instructor is paid affects the quality of his teaching, the Culture of Quality controversy continues.

Sixty-five faculty members have joined the recently reactivated AAUP to strengthen their stand on the Culture of Quality and to protect the rights of students and faculty.

Think Before You Drink

College life may seem like one big party, but before you can graduate from college...or just make it to class in the morning...you have to make it home safely at night.

If you drink alcohol,
don't drive.
It's as simple as that.

Stroller, friends find trouble on roadtrip after championship

I would like to personally thank whomever it was that manipulated the NCAA into having the 1988 Final Four Tournament in Kansas City. No, I'm not a basketball fan in any way, shape or form, and I most definitely loathe the Big Eight.

Me and a couple of my cronies were watching the game together: one Oklahoma University fan, one Kansas fan, and me. They were at each other's throats while I, on the other hand, was busy contemplating the next order of business on the night's agenda.

After 40 minutes of basketball and two suitcases of Old Milwaukee, the buzzer sounded with the Jayhawks on top. Finally, it was over. No more college basketball until the Summer Olympics . . . a dream come true.

One of my friends was crushed, while the Kansas enthusiast was glowing with pride. The alcohol may have had something to do with him glowing. To add insult to injury, he rubbed things in worse by watching the same channel.

Then it happened. The tv went to a live report from Westport . . . Pandemonium, chaos, incredibly drunk women. All the elements were there. It was God's way of saying, "Get in your car, grab more brewski and drive at high rates of speed to Westport at 11 o'clock at night."

We roused about 20 disgruntled students out of bed before we found one lucky individual who said he would take us to Westport. Within minutes we were out on the open road with a half a pack of cigarettes and a freshly stocked cooler. I love it when a plan comes together.

I'd heard of Westport, but I'd never had the opportunity to experience this three-ring fiasco first hand. I've done some off-the-wall things before, but never in my wildest dreams did I think I would be partying with four or five thousand overzealous KU fans. I felt like I was at an overcrowded fraternity house. It was so crowded. The only difference between Westport and an overcrowded fraternity house was that instead of walls, we were trapped between buildings.

Another obstacle that we had to overcome was trying to walk on top of mountains made of cans and bottles. I never once saw what the actual streets of Westport looked like! Then again, I didn't look down that much. Actually, I was always looking over my shoulder to see when I was going to be pelted with an empty bottle.

Never in my life have I seen so many law enforcement officials gathered together in one place at one time. These guys were definitely real cops, unlike the jokers from Maryville who carry around badges and speak like they grew up in the Boothill. Guns, riot masks, large clubs . . . these cats meant business. They even had the SWAT team up on the rooftops of all the bars.

On the other side of the coin, we, the partiers, still had the upper hand . . . there's some truth to the fact of having strength in numbers. We definitely had the numbers. We had the perfect set up. Thousands of inebriated fans, gallons of intoxicants and a police force that was forced to sit back and watch their town get ransacked, or so we thought.

Two or our more rebellious colleagues got into an altercation with something about specific parts of his girlfriend's anatomy. One thing led to another and within minutes a ferocious street brawl erupted. Did I mention the word quick? Within seconds, eight to 10 police officers blew by me and whisked my friends away to the friendly confines of their overflowing paddy wagon.

My over-riding concern was the safety of my friends, because they weren't the type of guys who would fare well in the Kansas City Jail. I kept having these vivid flashbacks of the movie "Bad Boys" . . . these guys might have been considered cute as far as prison life goes.

After some careful evaluation, we came up with the general consensus that any woman who stays at a party until four in the morning with a bunch of disgustingly drunk guys could be of a questionable moralistic background. Bet you'd never think those words would come from my mouth. Actually I didn't think I could find a place secluded enough to get down to business, you know the deal.

I started getting this sinking feeling that this party was never going to end, until the riot cops surrounded us with clubs and told us to hit the road. We didn't see any reason to argue with cops carrying clubs. The sun was peeking over the horizon anyway, so we loaded up and hit the open road back to the 'Ville.

I don't know if I was having an acid flashback or if I was just exhausted from the trip, but on the way home I saw what looked like a brand new bridge that had no roads connecting it. I don't know if the crew that built this bridge was heavily into barbituates, or if they were just from out of town.

Once again I would like to personally thank the Kansas Jayhawks for affording me the opportunity to go nuts with four or five thousand of their students. I'm definitely road tripping to the final four next year. Who know, maybe the University of Las Vegas will go all the way. A dream come true . . . Vegas, the heart of the American dream.

THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW

Cult classic returns to town

BY MICHELLE CAMPBELL
Features Editor

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" will be making a return appearance at the Missouri Twin Cinema April 12-14 at 8 p.m. Admission is $3.

Sponsors of the show include Thomas Market, Kentucky Fried Chicken, Campus Activities Programmers and the campus radio station, X-106.

X-106 will play music and give away prizes for the best and worst costumes from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m.

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is, as X-106 has dubbed it, the "World's Most Hilarious Participating Film."

The plot centralizes on Janet (Susan Sarandon) and Brad's (Barry Bostwick) night in an old mansion owned by a transvestite.

The film is full of opportunities for audience participation. One of these is the opening sequence in which a wedding is taking place. This gives the viewer a chance to pelt everyone within throwing distance with rice.

Another such opportunity arises when the bizarre crowd of transvestites teaches Brad and Janet to do the "Time Warp" dance. Audience members fill the aisles as the "Time Warp" begins.

X-106 has printed an "Etiquette Guide" which tells people who haven't been to the program how to behave and what and what not to bring.

DO-- a newspaper

unbuttered toast

DON'T-- your parents

"We ask those who come to the theatre, be cooperative and bring only the things to participate in the film—no baby oil, soapy water, flour or eggs," said Jeannie Rigby, assistant promotions director for X-106.

Spring brings fitness craze

BY CINDY MONTICUE
Staff Writer

The arrival of warm weather and the anticipation of a glorious summer vacation conjures up an image of a sun-washed beach hoarding massive numbers of members of the opposite sex.

Suddenly that picture is interrupted by the horrendous realization of actually wearing that bathing suit or those swimming trunks with the whole world staring profoundly at those rolls of fat clustered around the mid-section.

That's where exercise enters this scene. But for many, the motivation required to look like a healthy, in-shape human rather than a Jane Fonda reject is very low.

The physical fitness craze has prompted many a student at one time or another to rush out and buy that new pair of running shoes or walking shorts in hopes of getting in shape or losing weight.

Others resort to posting pictures of skinny models or fat slobs in what eventually turns out to be fruitless attempts at a regular exercise program.

According to the article "Psyching Up For Working Out" in the Fall 1987 issue of "Rx Being Well," more than half of all people who enroll in an organized exercise program drop out within the first six months. Their intentions may have been on target, but people finally decide they are too comfortable in their inactive lifestyle to adopt any major changes.

Recent studies are indicating the need for a regular exercise program. The benefits are virtually limitless—cardiovascular fitness, reduced stress levels and improved self-confidence and body image.

Different individuals have various reasons for exercising as well.

"I do it so I don't lose my sex appeal," Michael Goss, freshman, said.

"It helps me to lose weight and get in shape," Nikki Alger, freshman, said.

But the question still remains of how does one get psyched up for a workout?

"I can feel the fat growing on my thighs so I have to go out and exercise. Also, I know summer is coming, and I know I'll be wearing a swimming suit. I don't want my stomach to be hanging to the ground," Susan Parmelee, freshman, said.

For most, the prevalent answer to motivation is simply a careful look in the mirror. Others have incorporated it into their daily schedules.

"I don't feel good all day if I don't exercise. My goals are what motivate me to exercise every day. I try to take the best out of me every practice," Jorge Castilla, a member of the varsity tennis team, said.

To get into shape, one doesn't have to torture his body with agonizing pain. A moderate level of exertion that gives the heart a good pumping is sufficient, which usually includes a 20-minute session of aerobic activity three to five times a week.

According to "Sports Psychology," a person's mind affects whether he exercises, how he will exercise and the overall performance in those activities he engages.

If one day the thought of exercising makes the body feel queasy with just the mention of physical exertion, tell yourself you only have to go one-third the distance or time usually spent; the mere act of starting may well stimulate you to complete the full workout.

People, more times than not, justify their laziness with poor excuses not to exercise. Everyone has heard about how it's too cold, too hot, too windy, or simply how one is too tired, hungover or busy.

Exercising doesn't have to be a chore and shouldn't be. Successful tricks of the trade for motivation can be as easy as distracting oneself to pass the time such as listening to a Walkman (don't tune out traffic hazards) or daydreaming about a pleasant situation, place or someone.

Others have been successful by working out with a friend and setting goals. Treat yourself to something new when you reach a goal. And, of course, there's always the mirror that never lies.

"Once you start, it's hard to stop. You feel guilty if you don't stick to it," Lisa Hirter, senior, said.

As vacation nears, don't pack away your exercise along with the books; instead, make it an enjoyable part of your break—go cross-country skiing, jogging along the beach or swimming.

As "Rx Being Well" advises, "Habits of inactivity are hard to break. Fortunately, the exercise habit can also be hard to break."

Students to attend retreat

BY CHRIS BARKER
Staff Writer

Ten members of Northwest's Bearcat Battalion are going on Operation Lightning Strike on April 17.

"Leadership and experience will be the main goals of the weekend exercise," said Cadet Commander Dave Epling.

Ten military science third-year students are going to Fort Leonard Wood in south central Missouri to get preliminary training for the Advance Camp which will they will attend in this summer.

The students will be learning Land Navigation, Leadership Reaction and be involved in Tactical Application Exercises.

The navigation gives experience with compass and map reading by having groups of two students working together to find a fixation point.

Leadership is distributed within the students by having a computer randomly select various positions. One person may be chosen as squad leader while another is given the position of platoon leader.

Each assignment last for 24 hours and will be handed out once the students arrive at the camp.

"The tactical exercises are arranged to allow a squad of about six to 10 people to evaluate and react to a specific situation or obstacle," said MS III Commander John E. Parker.

"They may have a minefield that they have to cross by using a couple of boards. The cadets will have to figure out how to get to the other side by using the available material," he added.

The exercise will begin on a Friday evening and last until Sunday afternoon.

'Cats open MIAA season

Streak goes to seven wins

BY TROY APOSTOL
Sports Editor

Doubleheader sweeps over Missouri Western State College and Lincoln University increased the Bearcat baseball team's winning record to seven games.

A sweep of Missouri Western last Thursday in St. Joseph improved the 'Cats streak to five games while moving their overall record then to 19-8.

In the first game of the twinbill, defense proved to be the key during the first six innings. Neither team could break the scoreless deadlock.

However, in the top of the seventh, Northwest tallied five runs in leading themselves to a 5-1 victory.

Ron Czanstkowski led off the Bearcat seventh inning with a walk and then scored the first run of the game on a wild pitch. RBI singles by Warren Jones and Kevin Goeken accounted for two more Northwest runs.

Don Moldenaeur and John Witkofski drove in Northwest's final two runs.

Bearcat starter Roger Hughes went the distance in picking up his fifth victory with no losses. Hughes allowed only one run on five hits. He struck out two and walked four. Bryan Scruggs took the loss for Missouri Western.

In the nightcap of the doubleheader Northwest walked away with a 12-1 victory.

The 'Cats took control of the game early with two runs in the first and four runs in the second. The Bearcat second inning was highlighted by a two-run single from Scott Spurgeon.

In the Bearcat sixth, Steve Chor drove in three more runs on an inside-the-park home run.

Missouri Western got their only run of the game in the bottom of the sixth from relief pitcher Brian Gruenke.

Starter Tim Wolters ran his record to 2-0 with the victory. Wolters held the Griffons to no runs on three hits. Wolters struck out six and walked two.

Missouri Western provided the fine tuning that the Bearcat offense needed prior to their opening in Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association conference play.

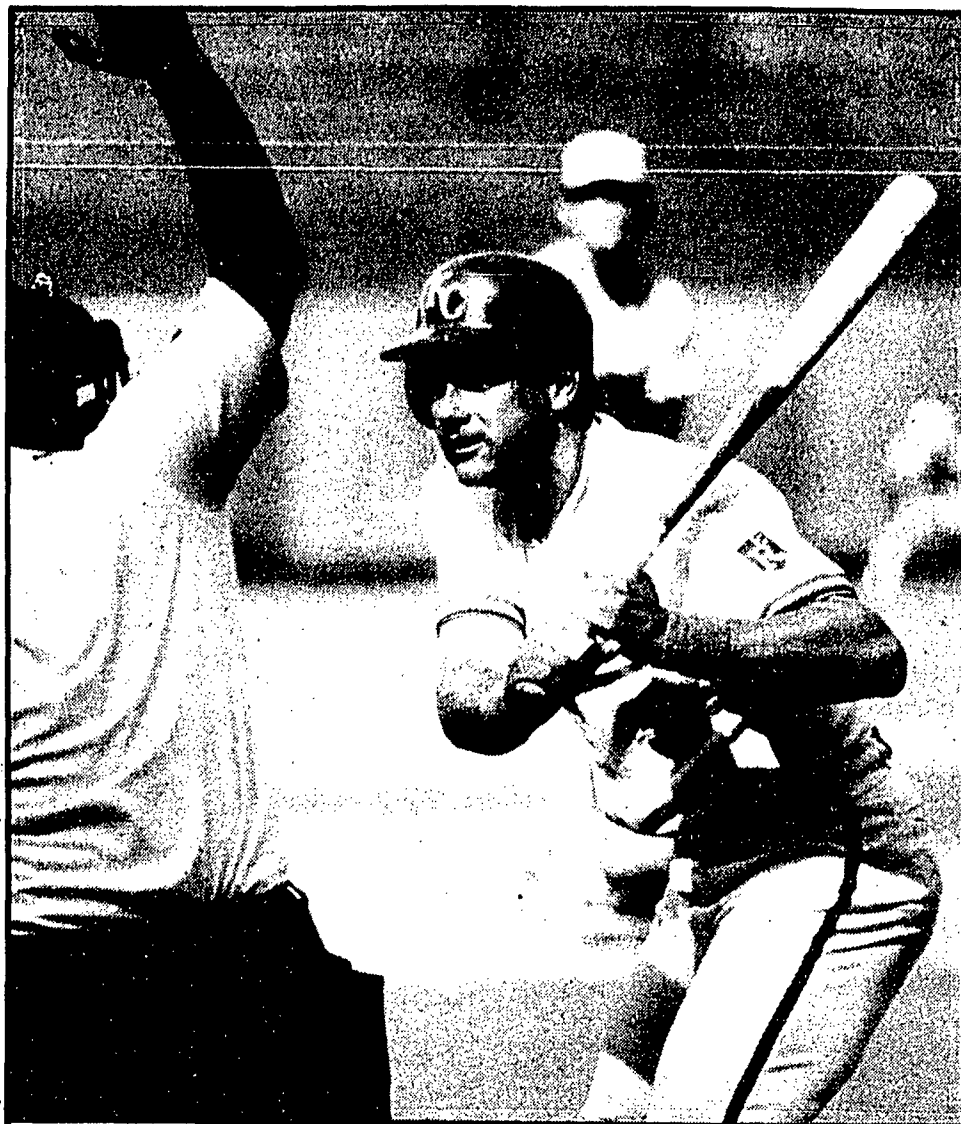

Northwest opened their conference record with a doubleheader sweep of Lincoln last Saturday in Jefferson City, Mo.

The Bearcats opened the first game with three runs in the first two innings. Northwest then added runs in the fifth and seventh innings to take a 8-2 victory.

Hughes continued his streak of perfection by improving his record to 6-0 with the victory. Hughes went four innings, allowing one earned run on two hits.

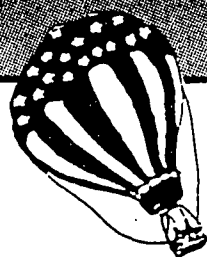

Monte Johnson held Lincoln in check throughout the second game to pick up a 9-0 victory for the Bearcats. Johnson moved his overall record to 4-0 while the Bearcats increased their conference record to 2-0 in the MIAA Northern Division.

Spurgeon tied a school single-season home run record by hitting his 13th of the season during the game.

Volunteers Needed for Camp Quality

Camp Quality is for children with cancer. No fee is charged to the children attending. There are three basic purposes to the camp. The first is to allow children with cancer to BE children again. The second is to give the families a much needed rest, knowing their children are happy and getting adequate medical supervision. The final reason is to make the experience such fun that the children will look forward to the reunion and their next camp. However, for the camp to be successful, companions are needed for the campers. At this moment, male companions are needed the most.

Camp Quality begins June 19 and ends June 24.
